

When government is too quick to step in to "help," the innovative ideas people might have created and implemented to solve their problems likely never will see the light of day. Yet, when government truly is limited, the people are unleashed to resolve challenging problems with creativity, ingenuity, and resourcefulness at a level that otherwise never would have been tapped.