

Critical theory (CT) and critical race theory (CRT) arose out of efforts to apply Marxism's economic principles to social categories such as biological sex, class, race, and what LGBT advocates would call sexual orientation. Both CT and CRT stress the importance of groups over individuals in the social structure.