

Religion is the only solid basis of good morals; therefore education should teach the precepts of religion, and the duties of man toward God.

These duties are, internally, love and adoration: externally, devotion and obedience; therefore provision should be made for maintaining divine worship as well as education. But each one has a right to entire liberty as to religious opinions, for religion is the relation between God and man; therefore it is not within the reach of human authority.

—Gouverneur Morris—

