

Jesus claimed to be God, and His claims were true or false. If they were false, He either knew they were false or He didn't.

- If He didn't know, He Himself was deceived, and He was deceiving others, albeit unintentionally. In this case He likely was insane, a complete lunatic.
- If He did know He was making false claims, He was intentionally misleading others about the most basic kind of information—who He was. This would mean these actions on His part were completely inconsistent with everything else He taught, for He advocated honesty, truthfulness, and right living before God and humanity. If Jesus' claims to deity were false and Jesus knew they were false, He was and is the ultimate liar and deceiver.
