

If the needs of the poor could be met without taking away resources from the rich, would I support such an approach, or would I instead favor one that demanded that the rich surrender their resources to help the poor?

